

Opinion Paragraph

For several reasons I think unity among general people cannot set themselves free from oppression. First of all, oppression because of discrimination can be seen among united people. For example, people from many races have been living in unity in the U.S.A. But, many of them are oppressed for being from different color, gender, origin etc. Recently, George Floyd was killed by white American police because of his color. Secondly, lack of good leaders can also make oppression common among united people. In that case, we can follow the partition of 1947. Before the British Raj, people from all religions and cultures lived together. But British rule produced a lot of incapable leaders. For that, people got oppressed despite being in unity and the unity broke in 1947. Finally, amorality in people can create disputes among them. Despite being in unity, Bangladeshi people get oppressed by amoral people. When these amoral people become the authority, we often face injustice and abuse of power. But, we can't protest against it in unity because citizens are brainwashed by those amoral people. In conclusion we can say that, for reasons like discrimination, amorality in people and lack of good leadership, people cannot set themselves free from oppression though they are in unity.
