Human Rights

From the moment we are born, we are bestowed with some basic facilities that are necessary to live. Those facilities are known to us as human rights. So, what are those facilities? We don't have to think hard about that. The things we need daily like food, water, clothes, a place to live etc. are the basic human rights. Unfortunately, everyone doesn't get these basic things around the world. While we are living in luxury, they are thriving on the leftovers. In respect to that, a question will cross our mind, is are not enough for everybody? The answer is clearly no. There is more than enough for everybody. But the problem is, people are not content. We want more and more which creates an imbalance. The variable that mostly decides, which side will get the best and the worst out of this imbalance, is money. Now it is clear that, the poor are the ones that get deprived of their rights as they can't afford it. But, human rights are not things to be afforded. On the contrary, these are the facilities that you are entitled to. Even if people understand it, they ignore it. The thing is, we don't want our luxury to end. Though we will always talk about how things are unfair to other, we will never act on it. But not all the people are same. Some people not only think but also feel the suffering of others. Those people form organizations that gather more peoples like them who together to ensure peoples' rights. These organizations collect funds from many sources and try to reach as many as suffering people. But it is not enough. Hence, we should also sacrifice our luxury a bit by bit and come forward to help those who are suffering. Gradually, it will diminish the imbalance and everyone will be able to live their lives with ensured human rights.
